“ To my other dad. You'll never know the impact you had on my life while I was growing up. I was 7 years old when I met you. Gail and I were in Brownies and Miss Sybil was our leader. I came to your house in Putney to spend the night with Gail. We were given a can of raw biscuit dough to play with. We climbed up into the rafters of the barn behind your house and squished and rolled the dough every where. We probably even ate some of it. Time went on and Gail and I became best friends. When we got big enough to drive she would ask you for some money and what ever amount you gave Gail you would give to me also. We were always spending the night at each others house. We would put our money together and buy Tab colas and pizza mix and that would be our supper. I never once heard you raise your voice. You treated us like queens. Miss Sybil on the other hand was the boss and we knew we better behave or we would get a talking to. I remember going to Tennessee with ya'll one summer while my daddy was sick. We rode horses and I got to see where you grew up. I thought it was the neatest thing that you grew up in the mountains. Even after I was grown I would come visit and you always had something to give me. You always had a garden and loved to work in it. When you passed away apart of me went with you. I am much older now and will miss you. I loved you like my own dad and Miss Sybil will always be my second momma. Terry was our baby sister and she will always be my other baby sister. Even though we are not blood kin you will always be my family. Love from the heart, your other daughter Sharon Parker Cox.
