“ A woman for all times. She survived the American era of suppression of women, then negroes, now African Americans, the Native Americans were long forgotten in our Jim Crow lives. I never once heard her succumb to the sad state we were in yet she always taught us about the American literary (racist, evil) South without saying one single disparaging word.

She taught my mother who revered her deeply. Frances lived down the street from my family and I visited her and her mother once. I was about to graduate from college. Miss Feagin sent me a metal bookmark from the hallmark store she worked as a gift. I suspect it was as much a financial consideration as it was a thought about a so called decent student born of a mother who was a former student.

She was a great lady who interacted (not fun to drive with her) and mostly inspired. I have not forgotten her (2022) nor will I ever (1973).

“ I remember Miss Feagin so fondly even after all these years since high school. She was a caring teacher who encouraged us to work hard and do our best; and she must have had some special gift that enabled her to see her students as possessing gifts and talents and potential that we didn't even know we had.

“ Frances Feagin's wit and and passion for English literature were beyond inspirational! She was so authentic and approachable and she always welcomed our questions and concerns. I was blessed to have known Ms. Feagin and learned so much from her, too...not just about English, but about "being real"!! I pray her family and friends will celebrate her life with joy and humor and that they will be comforted as they mourn her passing.

“ Ms. Feagin was certainly a force in everything she did in her life-teacher, retiree and friend. I will always remember wonderful times in High School literature class and the way she was always pushing you to your best. I had the fortune to travel to the British Isles with my mom, Ms. Feagin and Nancy Garrison back in 1998. The visit to Shakespeare's home was that much sweeter with those ladies!! I will miss her.
