“ Dear Irene,

A note to send you my deepest sympathies and condolences at this time. I do understand that no matter how long we have been preparing for the departure of our parents, we cannot ever be fully ready when the time comes. That can only be experienced in the now.

I am happy to hear you have been surrounded by the love and support of your nearest and dearest. I was especially happy to hear that your brother was supporting you towards the end. I can imagine that was very powerful for you in many ways.

I hope over this next while, you are able to really be carried in this loving energy and to experience it as being there for you first and foremost.

Grief's flow is so important as a way of moving onto our new life without our loved one. And yet connected at the ultimate level for ever.

Namaste,

David
