“ Richard and I were neighbors at Westwood Apartments when I moved to Albany in 1973. Richard knew that I was an exercise physiologist, so he asked me to set him up an exercise regimen. I did and helped him through the first two or three sessions. He then decided that he would do it on his own. Two or three days later I saw him and asked him how he was doing with the program. He said, "Fine." Two or three days later I saw him as asked him how he was doing with the program and he said, "Pretty good." The next time that he saw me, he turned and walked the other way. We both laughed about it and shared a six-pack of beer by the pool.
